THE GUTTERMUTH MYSTERY.

Reference was made in our dispatches yesterday to the Guttermuth mystery. The case is spoken of as that of a young man, a commercial traveler, who while walking down the streets of the New York on sight in May, was attacked by two men, who beat him into insensibility, but did not rob him, and who received no compensation whatever from their victims according to his companion.

Guttermuth, his skull having been fractured, but before he died efforts to obtain from him any clue to the assassin's grave.

It seems probable that he understood his motives, though his injuries may have clouded his intellect, and prevented him from explaining, but so far no insight has been gained by the police into the murder, and the indications are that it will go to swell the terribly long catalogues of unexplained and unavenged crimes which have been committed in New York.

There is now being waged against the overland check on horses, the torturing of animals in an unnatural position, the impaling of opponents, and tortures the poor beast. As much as he may be said, let us suggest, of the under and side check, when the horse is drawn down and the throat and veins are torn, the heart compressed. No check is so natural to nature, the heart, as the horse has been broken.

We present this morning a portrait of the Hon. Sackville West, British Minister at our national seat of Government.

FARNELL AND DAVITT.

Farnell's estimate of the new departure taken by Davitt is shrewd. The scheme for the so-called nationalization of the land, which Henry George has suggested in converting Davitt to, looks many of the most essential attributes of his popular programme. In the first place, it is the sympathies of any considerable class. A policy which sets out with the admission that private ownership in land is a mistake and a wrong, ownership by those who believe most logically in that which is wanting to their neighbors is private ownership in land. A plan which rolls out to every tenant farmer the hopes of day owning the land he cultivates, is intelligible to all, and at once gives the active sympathy and approval of a very large class. Even the lower class of peasants, who sub-rent their half-acre of poor land to raise potatoes on, can see in such a programme the possibilities of better things for themselves. The cry of "Ireland for the Irish" is one which possesses real meaning when it signifies the transfer of the land to the occupiers. But it can have little significance when, as under Mr. George's doctrine, it is interpreted as meaning that nobody owns the land any more, and that everybody is to pay rent to the Government for it.

Davitt also strikes a serious defect in the Davitt plan when he refers to the question of compensation. Henry George, in his work on "Progress and Poverty," has undertaken to put the Gordian Knot by proposing that compensation should not be allowed at all to the present land owners. It is easy enough to adjust theories to suit one's own purposes, but when it is proposed to make an issue in practical politics it becomes necessary to find schemes which possess at least an appearance of feasibility. The Irish politicians are sensible enough to perceive that it would be mere suicide for them to bring forward Mr. George's original plan, for the levying of political assessments upon public officials. We have already shown that the pretense of voluntary contributions in such cases is necessarily and always false, and that the process in the nature of blackmail. It is also an assumption of partnership in the federal service which is affronting to the people. It involves the intolerable claim that the civil service, which is maintained by the taxation of the whole nation, belongs to one political party as a matter of right. It is short-sighted and dangerous assault. The sooner it is abandoned the better.

THE DEATH OF HENRY SPALDING.

The Eastern Republicans managers are evidently determined to maintain the spoils system doctrine in regard to political assessments. They have already made an undignified and baseless attack on the Washington department clerks and other employees, and now we observe that a similar raid has been made on all the New York post offices. Of course these facts furnish the best kind of ammunition for like Senator Pendleton, and as the defenders of the spoils system are silly enough to try to vindicate it in Congress, it is sustaining very base and dangerous assaults. The destruction of the Record-Union is the only possible defense for the levying of political assessments upon public officials. We have already shown that the pretense of voluntary contributions in such cases is necessarily and always false, and that the process in the nature of blackmail. It is also an assumption of partnership in the federal service which is affronting to the people. It involves the intolerable claim that the civil service, which is maintained by the taxation of the whole nation, belongs to one political party as a matter of right. It is short-sighted and dangerous assault. The sooner it is abandoned the better.
